

POLITICAL SCIENCE (POLSC)

The Political Science major offers a program for undergraduates who wish to prepare for a variety of occupations. Graduates from Penn State Behrend in Political Science have pursued careers in business, education, law, and government service. Many have continued their studies in law school and in graduate degree programs. Graduates from the Political Science program have included Schreyer Scholars, finalists in national scholarship competitions, and matriculants in competitive graduate programs.

The Political Science department consists of five full-time professors, as well as part-time faculty. Among them, they offer courses that include all sub-fields within the major. The program is distinguished in several ways:

- All students enjoy an emphasis on developing writing and research skills through upper-level course work.
- Some students will work as interns in local, state, and congressional offices.
- Students with particular research interests often work in independent study or occasionally as research assistants.
